FOR SALE_HOUSES. FOR SALE-HOUSES. IS YOUR CASH CAPITAL SMALLS CHANCE TO GET A HOME AND MAKE A GOOD SPECULATIVE INVESTMENT AT THE SAME TIME ON A SMALL OUTLAY OF CASH.

While we have an offer for that elegant residence we advertised a few days ago in Georgetown, and although it is but a very little less than the regular price, we do not propose to accept it, as the house is really worth more than the advertised price. Georgetown has a more brilliant future than many are at present willing to admit. In fact we firmly believe that the next few years will witness a decided increase in its real estate values, brought about by the cable cars of the Washington and Georgetown railroad, the electric cars of the Metropolitan railroad, the contemplated entrance of the Baitimore and Onio railroad and the probable entrance of the Norfolk and Western.

The house is really better than new, because it is but two years old, fully seasoned and permanently settled. Contains eight rooms, furnace, open grate, but and cellar. Mrs. Russell Harrison has been off to Cresson Springs for a brief stay, but returned to her Cape May cottage early in the past week. She may also come here during encampment week. Mrs. Harrison's health has not greatly improved, nor has there been any change for the worse in her condition the past fortnight. If anything she has become a little stronger and is now able to do as she did here the last days of her stay—go out for a drive nearly every of her stay—go out for a drive nearly every day. Letters last week from members of the day. Letters last week from members of the household were very encouraging in tone and hopeful that the stay in the mountains had been the very best prescription for her. She is not, however, expected to return to the White House until very late in the autumn, and, in fact, not then if it is thought that any other place would be more beneficial or where she could be more comfortable.

The improvements in the White House will, it is confidently expected, be all completed, or at least sufficiently so to have the house open during the encampment. The furniture in the red parlor is being reupholstered, and this, with a tidyprocess in general, is about all the s that will be made this year. Down stairs in the basement the floors of the rooms on the south front are torn up and a solid bed of concrete will make them impervious to dampness and its results, before a new flooring is laid. The greenhouses and conservatories are being fepaired also, so that practically the only part of the basement where the usual household machinery goes on without a hitch is the laundry.

The committee reserve the right to reject any or all bids, and the successful bidder must furnish good and sufficient bond that the stipulations of his contract will be satisfactorily performed.

Bids may be made offering the committee a guaranteed amount, or a percentage of the receipts of the stand. The Vice President and Miss Lena Morton are back at their home on the Hudson, where, last week, they entertained the French minister, M. Patenotre. Mrs. Morten and the rest of her daughters are at their Bar Harbor cottage, where they are taking part in the gayeties incident to the season.

The summer so far has not been very prolific in romances or matrimonial engagements. At the fashionable resorts the eligible men are few and far between and so overcome with all the attentions they receive that they have no time for love-making which may need an engagement ring. The only engagement of note at Newport last week was of the usual style—a rich American girl and a young Englishman who may not have the money, but he has certainly the halo of a fine old name. The happy couple are Miss Helen Gammell, daughter of Mrs. William Gammell, a widow who is worth twenty-five million or so, and Mr. Arthur Herbert of the English diplomatic servfashionable resorts the eligible men are few Mass., has gone to Bethlehem, N. H. who is worth twenty-five million or so, and Mr. Arthur Herbert of the English diplomatic service and a brother of Hon. Michael Herbert, the English charge d'affaires. Mr. Herbert is a son of Lady Herbert, that charming English oman who writes so pleasantly and so interests herself in so many philanthropic and charitable affairs. The wedding day will not be long deferred, and the couple are getting the most delightful attentions showered on them by their friends.

It is refreshing, however, to remark that the Washington air is so full of romance that even the blistering weather of the past three months does not seem to have any det lately was about a pair of lovers, who were married one evening not long ago. Nobody going by the modest church would ever suspect from watching the crowd about the windows and doors that it was anything more than an ordinary couple getting married in the most ordinary way. But those accustomed to view things in a rosier light thought it just the prettiest kind of an ending to a love tale only one short winter and a spring old. The same date, just a year ago, the dear little bride with the lovelight in her eyes and a big bunch of pink roses in her hands, had selected as her wedding day. But the groom of the other night was not the groom of this occasion. Groom-elect No. 1 died just before the day set for the wedding. The dear little bride kept the year of mourning very faithfully for her lost love, but having grown only more charming meanwhile having grown only more charming meanwhile in the eyes of somebody else appointed the same day for her happy nuptials to No. 2. The whole story made the marriage as interesting to their friends as if it were a duke and duchess and a queen was to honor the occasion with her presence. Mrs. M. V. An Ounce of Prevention.

To the Editor of The Evening Star:

Your note of warning in Friday evening's edition on the cholera question was, to the point and well timed. Without posing as an alarmist it is necessary to face a probable danger with a little more activity than we appear to be doing, and it should be appreciated in all seriousness by our sanitary officers and Commissioners that epidemic cholera, not only in one but several of the largest European seaports, indicate always that it is very close to ourselves on this side of the Atlantic. All experience so far in Europe goes to show that our boasted quarantine system and sanitary cordons have failed as a barrier to cholera, and this almost axiom should suggest the necessity of side of the Atlantic. All experience so far in Europe goes to show that our boasted quarantine system and sanitary cordons have failed as a barrier to cholera, and this almost axiom should suggest the necessity of taking immediate steps to prepare for it even before it reaches this side. It being a "filth disease" it very naturally flourishes most in localities where the sanitary conditions and surroundings are below par, where the water supply is contaminated, where alleys are dirty with accumulated fifth and garbage and where people are overcrowded together in badly ventilated and worse plumbed houses, in narrow, crooked and dirty streets. It would be folly for us to sit still and depend upon New York, Boston, Baltimore and New Orleans and fight Q. R.! The printer talks intelligently about np. ff. 1c.
